Robert L. Boulware has purchased of Mrs. C. M. Harsha, her residence on S. West street. A part of the consideration paid was the transfer to Mrs. Harsha of the Boulware home on E. Pleasant street. Mr. and Mrs. Boulware and children will move to their new property soon. The Harshas will live in their property on W. Walnut street this winter.

Petitions have been circulating the past ten days to secure the sentiment of the people in regard to having moving picture shows in Hillsboro on Sunday. Many people signed the petitions expressing a desire for such a form of amusement. The matter was taken up in the Protestant churches last Sunday and resolutions were passed by all of them, except the Episcopal, opposing the movement. The Altruistic Association also passed a resolution to the same effect.

C. S. "Big Dick" Powell was found dead in his bed at his home in Greenfield last Friday morning. Death is thought to have been due to heart failure. He had been dead for some time when the body was found. The last time he was seen before his death was on Wednesday night, when he left the barber shop to go home. He was a well known character throughout the county. For many years before Greenfield went dry he was in the saloon business and after the town was dry was frequently in trouble for violation of the liquor law.

Within the last year the number of live stock in Ohio of all kinds except sheep, has increased, according to the figures sent the auditor of state by the county auditors. According to these reports there are in Ohio 907,127 horses, an increase over last year of 90,957; 1,448,978 cattle, an increase of 228,895; 34,253 mules, an increase of 7,133; 1,888,385 sheep, a decrease of 94,628; 1,972,786 hogs, an increase of 459,911. Highland county this year had 12,136 horses, an increase of 1,522; cattle 20,861, increase of 2,944; mules 611, increase of 34; sheep 7,761, a decrease of 4,951; hogs 49,109, an increase of 9,981.

ror to the hearts of all the people and the text was fixed upon the exploits of Attila whose barbaric methods have seemed to harmonize with his own ideas of the civilization under the German conception that would be best suited to the needs of Europe.

In case the unexpected should happen and the German murder machine should overcome Europe and dominate the seas—we Americans, whose dominating tendency is now toward permanent peace, would be under the necessity of spending billions of money in fleets and armies in order to maintain our own position, for already the German government has treated our Monroe doctrine with contempt and if it had not been for England we would have had to fight for it long ago.

The acts of vandalism, rapine and murder that constituted the treatment of Belgian civilians by raiding parties and some sub divisions of the German army are revolting to a degree which staggers belief—but they will all be substantiated with unerring certainty—when the history of this war shall have been written, and the perpetrators of them will suffer the withering penalty of public opinion, which, the writer believes, will go far toward bringing about the partial disarmament of all nations. Certainly at least, the verdict will be that such power as the German army has attained by reason of its stupendous armament must, if at all, be entrusted to other and more humane people.

I remained in Belgium until the 24th of August and during those twenty-four days I heard the cannon, saw the raiding parties and some organized regiments of soldiers who took part in the work of destruction which turned Belgium into a devastated and waste land out of one of the most, if not the most prosperous agricultural districts of the world; absolute paralysis of all business—terror in the hearts of all people and thousands of fresh graves—where repose men—boys—the very best and most able in the land—widows and orphaned children left desolate and in want and all because the nation rose in defense of her outraged honor—wherein had she failed she would have broken her solemnly, pledged word and besides, have, by refraining to defend her neutrality, perpetrated an act of war upon France and suffered the just contempt of all justice and honor-loving people throughout the world.

Seeing that there was no hope of finishing my work, at present, I left Ostend for London on the evening of the 24th of August and on the morning of the 25th a German raiding party entered the town and a battle ensued between them and the home guards, which resulted in a number of deaths, the details of which are already well known.

On the voyage from Ostend in Belgium to Folkestone in England there was no time during the four and a half hours, which it required to cross, that I did not see from one to three English war ships standing with steam up, in a solid phalanx stripped and ready for action should any enemy be so bold as to attempt to navigate the sea.

The sense of security that all on the great ship felt under the protection of the English fleet was the subject of universal remark by the more than fifteen hundred passengers on board, and I for one was made to feel, more than ever in my life before, how fortunate the world is that the dominating power of all the seas is in the hands of a people with traditions of conservatism, humanity and justice.

It has been said of the English that they are terrorized to the point of abject submission at the very name of Germany, but I say to you that they are unafraid, and that every man among them is determined to fight this war to victory even though it takes years and years to accomplish it.

There has been much speculation as to when this war will end and many have opinionated most positively, but I think I am in a position to impart some definite information on that point, after sounding the individual sentiments and fully comprehending the spirit of the common people of three of the belligerent nations. My belief is that this war will end when Germany is on her back and willing to accede to any terms vouchsafed to her by her enemies.

Those terms will largely be dictated by England and will be something like as follows, viz: Cession to France of Alsace and Lorraine; War indemnity to Belgium of enormous dimensions—an outlet to the sea for Russia at the expense of Germany, the loss to Germany of all her over sea possessions—the signing of a treaty by Germany providing for perpetual reduction of her army and navy to the minimum limits required, in time of peace, and a general limitation of Germany from which she may not recover for centuries to come.

DR. MINOR

The Cincinnati Dentist, Will Be at the Parker House, Hillsboro.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 17, 18, 19

I will use Nitrous Oxide and Oxygen for painless cavity preparation (drilling or grinding), and on all sensitive teeth if desired. I will extract teeth painlessly with this method. I make a specialty of Porcelain Fillings as well as Crown and Bridge work. I am not a beginner nor a worn out failure. Neither am I unknown to Highland County people, this being my seventh trip to Hillsboro with this painless equipment. I guarantee my plates and bridges to be equal to the best that the best men in Cincinnati put out. You are welcome for examination at any time and prices will be agreed on before I begin any work. All work will be finished before I return to Cincinnati Saturday night.

Those wishing work done at my city office should write for appointment and have work all done in one day without pain. For first class service call on me at Hillsboro on the dates advertised. No misrepresentation and moderate prices on all work.
